

Why Do We Assess Our Students?

What do you hope to learn? How do you use that information?

PAUL SANDROCK APR 05, 2019 07:28PM

Language credit requirement

to see what they can do

TO KEEP IN TOUCH WITH WITH WHAT STUDENTS ARE PICKING UP

To provide feedback to students

To ensure that they use language in appropriate context to understand the teaching progress and reevaluate the followup teaching/learning

To see what the students can do.

To let them know what they can accomplish

1. Assist learning and motivate students 2. Evaluate programs and inform instructional decisions

To motivate student's learning via consistant assessment result

to see what more activities we can do to improve accuracy

because a grade is all they want. :(

To reflect our teaching and make adjustments if necessary

To make sure they know and are able to use what they've learned.

To know how well they learned and and to know whether we need to change our teaching if a lot of them couldn't get one thing.

To see if students can complete authentic tasks

To understand the gap between teaching and learning.

to see how we can help them learn the language more effectively

to see if teaching purposes have been accomplished

To provide feedback and gauge their understanding of the material

1. To make sure what students are actually learning matches the original learning outcome.

2. Make teaching and learning more effective.

Students need to be assigned a grade

To evaluate teaching efficiency and student's learning

To give students a sense of progress/achievement

To find out what the weakness and strength are motivate students by helping them know what they can do as the result of learning.

to learn where our students are at and plan what we should do next to bring them to the goals set by the class/program

To know what students can do right now and what they need in order to grow and do more.

To give students ideas how they are doing.

To make them learn 12

To know what the students can do to learn about teaching effectiveness

To create appropriate test for foreign language learners.

To give students feedback that is meaningful to them and their learning

To learn how effective our instructions are

To see what students actually learned
